LONDON, March 15.

THE Empress of Russia, safe in the inaccessiblenefs of her dominions, has declared that she will not accept of the mediation of any other power, in settling a peace with the Porte; she declared to Prince Lobkowitz, the Imperial Ambassador, that though she wished to live on good terms with his court, that she did not understand, what right they had to prescribe terms, to a nation who has always been and must continue independant of every other power: that it was both ungenerous and unprecedented in the Court of Vienna to propose to reap advantage, from a war, in which they had taken no part; and, as for her own part, she would never consent to a measure which would rob her of the just renown, which her arms had acquired.

One of the reasons assigned for the Hon. Charles Fox resigning his place as one of the Lords of the Admiralty, is, That Lauchlin Macleane was preferred to Mr. O'Brien, in the office of Collector of Philadelphia:—Another is, That the meeting of the Lords to do the business of the Admiralty interfered so much with the business of Almacks, that it was impossible to attend both—he has wisely given up a few hundreds a year to take better care of so many more thousands a night.

March 14.

A Correspondent observes that the Ministry have acted with great judgment in desiring Keith to invest himself with the order of the Bath, as it would be impossible to find a Dane in Copenhagen who would have performed the task for him.

When the Queen of Denmark was first seized, Count Rantzau behaved with the greatest insolence and brutality, making use of several opprobrious expressions in the English language, which it seems the Count understands. As her Majesty was imprisoned early in the morning, the Queen Dowager and her Emissaries were very assiduous to prejudice the minds of the people, by making them believe that her Majesty was taken in bed with Struensee. It is thought that had not the seand similar villainous stratagems been made use of with so much art and success, the people would certainly have proceeded in a body to the Castle of Cronenburgh, and demanded the immediate enlargement of their Queen, as two days before her imprisonment she was universally the object of admiration and esteem.

March 16.

Extract of a Letter from Copenhagen, dated February 25.

"Last Saturday Major de Falkenthield, one of the state prisoners, was released from his confinement. The same day Count de Brandt was brought before the Commissioners at the citadel, in the same manner as Count Struensee had been before; his chains, which weighed 18 lb. were taken off in the Anti-Chamber. When he was brought into the Audience-Chamber before the Commissioners, he seemed at first somewhat disconcerted, but in a little time recovered his spirits and behaved with becoming resolution. When his examination was finished, that of professor Bergen, the King's physician, came on, which lasted above three hours, and he has since been allowed the use of pen and ink, &c. but the depositions of both the above prisoners remain a secret as yet.

"By order of the Commission, the equipages, horses, &c. of Counts Struensee and Brandt have been sold by auction.

"The English Minister dispatched a Messenger to London the day before yesterday; and last night his Excellency was at Court.

"Count Struensee was this day again under examination."

Mr. Ogg, one of his Majesty's Messengers, was dispatched on Saturday morning from Lord Rochford's office, to Colonel Keith at Copenhagen.

So much has been repeatedly said about the misconduct of the East-India Company's servants, and the necessity that the Government should take the whole management of their affairs into their own hands, that a Correspondent says some of the Nabob's must have thrown gold dust in the eyes of our men in power, otherwise they would long before this have begun the salutary reformation.

It is reported that his Majesty has ordered 1000 guineas out of his privy purse to the Chapter Coffee-House Association.

On Saturday there was a great meeting of several of the Nobility at Lord Rockingham's, to consult upon proper measures for the further opposition to the Royal Marriage Bill.

March 18.

Yesterday the Earl of Hillsborough, Secretary of State for the plantations, had a numerous levee at his house in Hanover-square.

Monday in the forenoon, before the levee, Dr. Solander and Mr. Banks attended Lord Rochford to St. James's, where they had a long conference with his Majesty.

Many people wonder that the Archbishop of Canterbury is not strenuous in opposition to the Marriage Bill, since his Grace can expect no translation but to the kingdom of Heaven, to which the defence of a divine ordinance must have contributed considerably.

The friends of the constitution grow hourly more alarmed at the Royal Marriage Bill, because it is now discovered to be a declaratory bill, specifying that the crown is not only to have, but that it always had, a power of controling the choice of our Princes, and that, consequently whatever unions are formed without the King's consent are absolute nullities.

Many Gentlemen of Ireland are greatly mortified when they recollect the distinction with which the patron saints of Wales and Scotland are treated, that poor St. Patrick was not yesterday judged worthy of any compliment at Court; though more ministerial dependents are maintained by his sons than by the united offspring of David and Andrew, notwithstanding the latter have lately been honoured with a preference at St. James's.—[It certainly must be an ungrateful Court that confers Honours and Rewards on those who have been the Cause of so much Rebellion and Bloodshed, and treats those, who are deserving of Honours, with Disdain.]

We hear the proprietors of the Pantheon, finding their house will not take in its present way, are determined to lett it for some other purpose. But the difficulty is to get a tenant. Their house cost them at least 50,000*l.* so that, allowing them only five per cent. for their money, they must have a rent of 2500*l.*

March 19.

Extract of a letter from Copenhagen, dated March 1.

"A singular accident has happened within these few days, which has produced a dawn of hope for our unfortunate Queen. The Dowager, who is the bitterest of her enemies, going into her carriage about a fortnight since, hurt her leg against the step, which inflamed, and put on an appearance of mortification, a circumstance peculiarly dangerous to a woman at her time of life (one between forty and fifty years of age) and which seemed likely to be attended with such serious consequences, that the Physicians and Surgeons of the Court were of opinion, that an amputation must take place; one Cleveland, an English student of physic, who has lately paid a visit to the university, opposed the practice of the Danish faculty, and declared he would forfeit his head if he did not preserve her Majesty from the fatal effects they had prognosticated.

"The Queen Dowager immediately sent for him, and put herself under his care, and by his exhibiting the bark, and some other judicious treatment, she is now in a fair way of recovery. During his attendance on her Majesty, he repeatedly, as it is said, mentioned the severity with which the reigning Queen was treated; and it is now certain, that her condition is made much more agreeable to her than it has been since her confinement."

It is a certain fact, that Lord and Lady Grosvenor now cohabit together. His Lordship appears quite satisfied with his lot, and behaves in such a manner, as to convince his friends, that a contented Cuckold is a very happy creature.

When Lady Grosvenor was first convicted of inconstancy, it appeared that Miss Vernon had acted a part altogether unbecoming her character. The Queen dismissed her from her place as Maid of Honour. Soon after a letter appeared in the papers signed MERCY; the purport of this epistle was to extenuate the young Lady's offence, by alledging the circumstance of her youth and inadvertence, as an alleviation of her misconduct.—The Queen happened to read this letter; it affected her; she shewed it to her Royal Consort; they considered the matter, and humanely ordered Miss Vernon to be again appointed to her former station as Maid of Honour. The young Lady being some time after on a visit to a female friend, mentioned the circumstance, expressed her sense of the obligation, and only wished for an opportunity of personally returning her thanks to the author. That, my dear, says Miss Vernon's friend, you shall soon have; and taking her by the hand, introduced her to Dr. Hill; this, says she, is the Author of that letter signed Mercy, which brought about your reconcillation with the Queen. Miss Vernon politely returned the Doctor thanks, in a manner which evinced that her mind was deeply impressed with the favour.

CHARLES-TOWN, May 28.

THE Honourable OTHNIEL BEALE, Esq; (who was born in the Year 1683, and is allowed to be one of the best Militia Officers in America) having, on Account of his great Age, and late indifferent State of Health, thought proper to resign the Command of the Charles-Town Militia; we hear, it is under Consideration, whether the same shall be divided into two Regiments (one for each Parish) or remain as it is, with an Augmentation of Companies; and that it is proposed to form out of the Whole, one Company of CADETS, as a Nursery for a Succession of good Officers, one Company of GRENADIERS, and one of LIGHT INFANTRY; which Arrangement, as there is already a very respectable Company of ARTILLERY, would render the Charles-Town Regiment of Militia one of the most complete in the Colonies.

It has lately been reported, but on what Foundation we cannot learn, That a very respectable Castle will soon be built upon James-Island, on or near the Spot where Fort Johnson now stands; and that the Expence thereof will be defrayed by some Provision to be made by the present Parliament of Great-Britain.

William Middleton, Esq; is returned by Land, from making the Tour of the Northern Colonies.

Four Assistant-Judges, £. 300 each.
The Attorney-General, £. 500.

Jurors are to be drawn in the same Manner as they have been heretofore, but none shall be obliged to serve out of his District.—And the Judges may, on Petition, determine all Causes (except where the Title of Lands may come in Question) for any Sum not exceeding Twenty Pounds Sterling, in a summary Way, without a Jury.

On Thursday the Reverend Mr. Walker, for St. Mark's Parish, Mr. William Elliott, jun. Captain Alexander Urquhart, and several other Passengers, arrived here from London, in the Ship King George, Captain William Curling.

Last Sunday Daniel Huger, Esq; of this Province, arrived here from St. Kitts, whither he accompanied Sir Ralph Payne, the new Governor of the Leeward Islands, from England.

A CONSTANT READER.

HORACE, ODE XXII. B. I.

To ARISTIUS FUSCUS, INTEGER VITÆ.

THE Man, O Fuscus! free from Strife,
That leads a pure and upright Life,
Needs not the poison'd Moorish Dart,
The Weapon of a guilty Heart;
Whether he travels thro' the Sands
Of dreary Afric's desert Lands;
Or up Caucasus' craggy Side;
Or where Hydaspes rolls its Tide:
For lately whilst, devoid of Care,
I wander'd far, singing my Fair,
I met a Wolf, whose monstrous Size,
Occasion'd Terror and Surprize.
The Monster saw, and much alarm'd,
He fled before me, though unarm'd:
A Monster horrid, wild, and bold,
Such as Apulia ne'er did hold;
Tho' in her Woods, with horrid Howl,
Droves, press'd by cogent Hunger, prowl:
Such as Numidia's scorching Shore,
That echoes to the Lion's Roar,
Did never see on sultry Day,
Fiercely ranging in Quest of Prey.
Wing me to the frigid Zone,
Where the bright Sun never shone;
Where stand the Mountains, top'd with Snow,
Where never Herb nor Tree did grow;
Where the radiant God of Day,
Parches the Earth with burning Ray:
Yet there, e'en there, I'll sing my Fair,
The Nymph, my chief, my only Care;
Whose Accents fair her Swain inspire,
And kindle Love's extatic Fire:
Her Smiles my Heart with Raptures fill,
Happy with her, I dread no Ill.

THOUGHTS on GALLANTRY, LOVE, and MARRIAGE.

Hail, wedded Love!
Perpetual Fountain of Domeſtic Sweets! MILTON.

MARRIAGE is a duty of divine appointment, and therefore it neceſſarily follows, that it is calculated to promote the real intereſt and happineſs of mankind.

We find the legiſlative powers of the ſeveral ages and nations of the world, each adding their ſanctions to the inſtitution, and ſettling, according to their reſpective notions of religion, certain rules and directions relating to it. And though ſome have, no doubt, confined it within unreaſonable limitations, and others, as erroneouſly, treated it with a ſhocking and unbounded licentiouſneſs; yet, upon the whole, every civilized people have, in greater or leſs degrees, concurred to promote and encourage it.—I might here, very eaſily produce, a long run of learned quotations from the antients, in ſupport of the remark; but as I take up my pen in the ſervice of ladies, and lady-like gentlemen, I ſhall deſiſt from every thing of this ſort, and ſpare them the trouble of reading, what they probably would not underſtand.

If marriage is a duty, the performance of it tends moſt effectually to procure us happineſs; ſince our duty and intereſt are ever inſeparably connected.——Happineſs is certainly what we are all aſpiring after, and we ſhall find it the end of all our purſuits, of all our hopes and wiſhes: the methods which are taken to ſecure this deſired object, are infinite and innumerable; but we may be ſatisfied, there is one only path which leads us to the prize; and they only ſucceed in the important purſuit, who act up to the laws of their nature, and follow the dictates of virtue and morality.—The ſatisfaction which reſult from intemperance and debauchery, are by no means to be ſet in competition with thoſe which attend chaſtity and honour.——The pleaſures which ariſe to the married man are laſting and ſincere, unſullied and ſubſtantial; while the libertine, even in his moſt joyous moments, in the height of all his ſenſual exceſſes, is certainly ſuperlatively wretched.

Let us compare the married man with the libertine, and make a general ſurvey of their reſpective pleaſures.——Conceive the former happy, truly happy, in the eſteem and affection of an amiable and virtuous woman, who repays him all his care and tenderneſs, with duty, love, and ſubmiſſion; who partakes in all his joys, intereſts herſelf in all his afflictions and diſtreſſes, and miniſters, to the utmoſt of her power, relief, ſupport, and comfort.—Thus it is with thoſe, where the union is founded on mutual affection, that affection on mutual eſteem, and that eſteem on virtue, ſenſe, and reaſon.—Purſue the pleaſing proſpect yet farther, and conceive the happy pair bleſſed in a numerous offspring: What tender paſſions, what home-felt raptures, poſſeſs and actuate by turns, the parents breaſts? See their hearts leaping, burning, melting, with joy, with hope, with tenderneſs! pleaſing views of future happineſs, reſerved in heaven for the boys, fill the imagination of the father; while the tender boſom of the fonder mother, partial to her own ſofter ſex, indulges in painting pleaſures for her daughters, the riſing images of herſelf; and both unite, with warmeſt zeal, to inſure ſucceſs and happineſs for the dear pledges of their mutual loves.—Theſe are matrimonial comforts! Conjugal delights! Pleaſures taſted only by the worthy few!

But let us produce the contraſt to this inchanting picture.—See then the rake, widely miſtaking his road to happineſs, and blindly ſeeking it in the embraces of a harlot: See him flying to the polluted arms of a proſtitute in ſearch of pleaſure, but meeting certain infamy, remorſe, diſeaſe and death. Add to this, that the libertine is unacquainted with all the tender ſenſations of a parent, and ſtranger to all a father's hopes and wiſhes; ſince if children follow the guilty intercourſe, they are thrown on the wide world at large, for ſupport and ſuſtenance; and generally ſpeaking, wanting the advantages of a virtuous education, follow the examples of their unworthy progenitors, inherit their vices, and grow up a burden to ſociety, a miſſance to the public.

But here the debauchee will probably object, that a married life does not always turn out ſo happily as I have above deſcribed it; ſince marriages often prove perpetual ſcenes of wretchedneſs and miſery: He will refer me perhaps to a number of unhappy families, as ſtanding melancholly examples to illuſtrate his remark, and add validity to the objection.——To this I anſwer, That the uneaſineſs which we but too often obſerve among married perſons, are owing, almoſt entirely, to their own follies and indiſcretions, and by no means, to any flaw of bleiſh in the inſtitution itſelf. When people are induced to marriage from wrong and unworthy principles, no long-liv'd happineſs can reaſonably be hoped for or expected: When, for inſtance, a ſet of features, a complexion, the tincture of a ſkin, or a few external charms, are made the baſis of promiſed bliſs, happineſs in that caſe muſt certainly be precarious and unſubſtantial: When the gratification of a ſenſual appetite becomes the prevailing motive, what can be more clear, than that pleaſure will vaniſh with enjoyment, and expectation be loſt in poſſeſſion? Or, laſtly, when an inſatiable deſire for riches, titles, pomp, and grandeur, captivates and engroſſes the ſoul, and appears the great inducement, 'tis no wonder if life is imbittered with perpetual vexations and inquietudes. Nor would it, under any of the above circumſtances, be a phænomenon at all unaccountable, if the parties thus imprudently matched, ſhould begin repentance even in the honey-moon. If the libertine would allow himſelf to advert to a view like this, he might eaſily diſcover the fatal ſources, from whence ſo many unhappy marriages ariſe, and ſee at once the weakneſs of his ill-grounded objection.

Happineſs in marriage can only be expected, when virtue, reaſon, and religion, are at the bottom. Previous to an union of this intereſting nature, where the parties are ſolemnly engaged for life, the greateſt care and circumſpection are required; a due attention to temper and diſpoſition, and a proper regard to every other object of worldly prudence, are indiſpenſible pre-requiſites: Who ſhould any precipitately engage in the matrimonial contract, who are not actuated by a mutual eſteem, and by a pure diſintereſted affection, free from the inſtigations of ſenſe, and void of avarice and ambition.

I have now done with the gentlemen (if indeed a libertine gives that title) and what I have farther to offer, reſpects more particularly the ladies.——And with regard to them, I cannot help ſaying upon this occaſion, that I am apt to believe, that their own behaviour tends in a great meaſure to increaſe the number of rakes and debauchees. That they encourage thoſe of this order, is, I am afraid, but too true. That a "reformed rake makes the beſt huſband," is a maxim almoſt univerſally allowed amongſt them; and we find from daily experience, that the coundrel, after having debauched half a dozen girls, ſhall marry at laſt, as the reward of his enormities, a lady of merit and fortune. In ſhort, vanity is the great, the leading foible of the ſex; every woman thinks herſelf poſſeſſed of charms ſufficient to attract the whole attention of the man ſhe loves; and therefore fondly hopes, that theſe charms, under her management, will neceſſarily reclaim the wanderer, and fix him unalterably here; and a man can take no more effectual method, to ſecure himſelf the eſteem of our modern ladies, in general, than by appearing a rake, at leaſt in practice, if not in principle; and I have known a young fellow, whoſe behaviour was really virtuous, very ſolicitous to be thought a libertine by the girl to whom he paid his addreſſes. If things are ſo (and let the ladies examine partially into their own conſciences, and tell me if they are not) ſuffer me, my dear country-women, to expoſtulate a moment:—If then you are really virtuous, ſhew that virtue by diſcountenancing the vicious: favour none but the virtuous and the moral; and patronize no longer the profligate and the abandoned: thoſe who have forfeited their honour and their innocence, baniſh from your company; and refuſe your hearts and hands to men unworthy of them. Let pride aſſiſt you, ſince here it may be commendable. Diſdain to accept the filthy leavings of an odious ſtrumpet, and reject with indignation, thoſe who have incontinently haunted ſtews and brothels. What can you expect from an alliance with a libertine?——A rake, believe me, is a wild beaſt, not eaſily tamed; he ſeldom thinks of reforming, till his ſurgeon aſſures him he muſt rake no more. But even admitting his reformation to commence in time; what dull, inſipid, deſeaſed, inſipid huſbands, do theſe reformed rakes generally turn out! And there is a circumſtance ſtill behind, which aggravates and ſtrengthens the misfortune; their diſeaſes but too often deſcend to their innocent unhappy progeny, who are doomed, alas, to labour under all the miſeries of a weakly conſtitution, and to drag a ſhort wretched ſickly life, perpetual monuments of their fathers guilt and ſhame!

Be aſſured, a debauchee is one of the greateſt monſters the world produces; one of the greateſt peſts ſociety is burdened with; reſolve then in conſequence, to baniſh from your converſe and acquaintance, men of this obnoxious character.——The world, abandoned as it is, is not yet ſo loſt to every thing great and good, but that there are ſtill ſome men of virtue and honour to be found; virtuous women are not more numerous than virtuous men, and there are enough of theſe, to make thoſe happy. There are ſtill, thank heaven, ſome worthy men, adorned with ſenſe and learning, with complaiſance and affability, and with every agreeable accompliſhment: Here then depoſite your hearts and fortunes, nor doubt the gratitude of thoſe, to whom they are entruſted. Effects are always adequate to their cauſes; let therefore the union be founded on virtue, honour, and prudence; and then, in all human probability, happineſs will enſue.

But as a rake and debauchee ſhould be the deteſtation of every woman, who has pretenſions to virtue, ſo there is another character, which almoſt equally deſerves to be baniſhed the company of every ſenſible woman: Theſe are the fops and fribbles, the petit maitres of the age; thoſe pretty fellows, who trip about, all powder, eſſence, and perfume. Now what happineſs, I beg leave to aſk, can a ſenſible woman reaſonably expect, from the moſt intimate alliance with a man of this deſpicable order? His own dear perſon is the ſole object of his care and concern; his every wiſh centers there; and not a thought ever ſtrays beyond theſe limits. Here, ladies, then is a ſubject for your wit and raillery; here point your ſatire. A fop is a man in maſquerade, and as ſuch deſerves your utmoſt ridicule. But yet, alas, how different from ridicule, is your general treatment of theſe gilded toys, theſe glittering baubles? Inſtead of deſpiſing their things of ſilk, you but too often ſacrifice to their vanity, by ill-judged praiſe and admiration.—Dare to be wiſe!—Be captivated no more with ſhew and trifles, but learn to diſtinguiſh between real merit, and extrinſic ornament.

There is but one other female foible, with which I ſhall concern myſelf at preſent. It is that ambitious ſpirit which prevails ſo univerſally amongſt them. What a ſurprizing infatuation muſt poſſeſs that woman, who can ſacrifice her whole happineſs in this world to her ambition; and who can ſolemnly engage herſelf to a man, to ſtate it at the loweſt, indifferent to her, purely to gratify this reigning paſſion! What muſt we think of thoſe, who can prefer outward pomp and empty pageantry, to inward eaſe and ſolid ſatisfaction; or who had rather be wretches in ſtate, than happy in a more moderate fortune? People of this untoward diſpoſition, muſt be left to experience that puniſhment which their own perverſe notions will neceſſarily produce; nor ſhall I attempt offering any thing on the occaſion to them; but thoſe, who are yet untainted, I would, methinks, preſerve from the infection, and guard againſt the fatal principle:—Be aſſured, affections are not to be purchaſed, nor can riches command our love, or direct its object. Happineſs is confined to no rank or degree, but often leaves the ſuperb apartments of higher life, to revel amid the calm retirements of humbler ſtations: A woman of ſenſe and virtue, will infallibly be more truly happy, in the arms of a man of honour and merit, though they ſhare only the ordinary conveniences of life, than ſhe could poſſibly be, with a rake, or a fribble, though he poſſeſſed both the Indies. In ſhort, happineſs in marriage can only be expected, when

The fair ſhall liſten to deſert alone.

A word or two more, and I have done. As our conduct in the choice of a partner for life, is of the utmoſt conſequence, it undoubtedly concerns us, to be particularly circumſpect in the affair. Reaſon and nature dictate, that no parent has a right to make his child unhappy; ſince, as Shakeſpear ſays,

——What is wedlock forced, but a hell,
An age of diſcord, and continual ſtriſe?
Whereas the contrary bringeth forth bliſs,
And is a pattern of celeſtial peace.

I ſhall conclude with a tranſcript from a play of Haywood's, as given by the Tatler.

Oh! Marriage, happieſt, eaſieſt, ſofteſt ſtate,
Let debauchees and drunkards ſcorn thy rites;
Who, in their nauſeous draughts and luſts, profane
Both thee and heav'n, by whom thou wert ordain'd.
How can the ſavage call it loſs of freedom,
Thus to converſe with, thus to gaze at
A faithful beauteous friend?
Bluſh not, my fair one, that thy love applauds thee,
Nor be it painful to my wedded wife,
That my full heart o'erflows in praiſe of thee.
Thou art my law, intereſt, paſſion, mine;
Paſſion and reaſon join in love of thee:
Thus, thro' a world of calumny and fraud,
We paſs both unreproach'd, both undeceiv'd;
While in each other's intereſt and happineſs,
We without art our faculties employ,
And all our ſenſes without guilt enjoy.

THE Subſcriber intending to depart this Province in a very ſhort Time, deſires all thoſe indebted to him, to ſettle their reſpective Accompts with his Attornies, by the firſt Day of JULY next; otherwiſe, they will be put into the Hands of an Attorney at Law.
